

Shown in the above photo are Chauncey Herbert Crittenden, prominent Jersey breeder and rancher of Hoytsville, and Mrs. Crittenden, to whom Mr. Crittenden contributes "A good deal of my success." The couple celebrated their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary January 21st.

Chauncey Herbert Crittenden, 74, of Hoytsville, recognized as one of the leading breeders of purebred Jersey cattle, said he got started in this line when he got tired of working for the other fellow and decided to go into business for himself.

"I started out for myself by buying land and homesteading it. For several years, I ran about 400 head of sheep and a few cows. Realizing that sheep and cattle did not mix well, and deciding that milk is the most perfect food for mankind, I decided to stick strictly to cattle."

Granning a bit, Crittenden said, "I read of the Jersey being the all-star breed—'more cow to milk, less cow to feed; efficiently streamlined to give milk that is cream-lined,' so I made the Jersey breed my hobby."

"I started out by buying eight purebred heifers from Wisconsin in 1910 and three head a few years later. I haven't brought any females on the place since that time and have tried to get the best strain of bulls possible. I now have a fine herd of purebreds."

Mr. Crittenden, who was born Feb. 5, 1872, at Hoytsville, has been active in civic life. He was a trustee when the present school was built and was active in the building of the old amusement hall, which burned, and of the present hall. He was a member of the committee which activated the building of the Echo dam and was interested in the construction of the Hoytsville-Chalk Creek reservoir. He has completed the construction of an individual reservoir on his property and has almost completed a second.

He was instrumental in the development of a rural mail route to Hoytsville and assisted in the establishment of the lane across the valley.

"In early days in Hoytsville, pioneers established irrigation canals on the east and west sides of the river, and, in later years, made new ones higher up to take in more land. I remember," Crittenden said, "when the east side ditch was started. I was a small boy, but my two older brothers helped dig the ditch with pick and shovel. It was laid off in ten-rod sections and the diggers were paid so much a section. The canal was six miles long."

"The diggers, I have heard my father say, had hard and dark faces."

"At that time," the early president said, "the cradle and cy were used in cutting hay and grain. I remember father telling of cutting an acre and a quarter with a cradle and binding and shocking it in one day. We still have the old cradle he used. Then came the reaper, which would cut and rake the grain off in bundles. About six men would follow and bind, making the band to hold the bundle with a small part of the bundle."

"Then came the self-binder. The first one was set up in Alonzo Winters' field by William Freeman. One of the first binders was bought by Robert Mills and Joseph Wilkenson. Ed Mills was running it and it failed to work properly. It would cut and elevate, but would not deliver the bundle. Alonzo Winters, the main mechanic, was called. He cleaned the grain all out and started it up again, but still it clogged."

Ed asked, "What do you think is the matter with it?" Alonzo replied, "Well, I'd pronounce it indigestion."

Crittenden married Jemina Vine Sargent Jan. 21, 1892, at Hoytsville. They were the parents of eleven children, as follows: Ivan H. Crittenden, West Los Angeles, Calif.; George C. Crittenden, Ogden; Chauncey A. Crittenden, Hoytsville; Clara E. Copley, Coalville; Anna Worrall, Ogden; Melva Rees, Coalville; Leo Irwin Crittenden, Coalville; Erma M. Peterson, Ogden; Victor Joy Crittenden, Hoytsville; Ina Weston, Ogden, and Orlo J. Crittenden, Hoytsville.

They have 46 grandchildren and three great grandchildren.

"I was born in a one-room log cabin," Crittenden said. "I used to sleep on a trundle bed which was pushed out into the room at night and under a bedstead in the day. My first schooling was in a one-room log house. I went from there to the Summit academy, then to the U.S.A.C. at Logan."

"I played left tackle on the team which played the first Thanksgiving football game with the University of Utah. Old Iron Horse, they used to call me. We had to scrape about a foot of snow off the ground so we could play that game. We won it, twice to nothing."
